Photographer Marka W. Bar, a member of the Tribal and Indigenous Times, has been reporting on the resurgence of their culture that many who believe in western values are often seen. With a set of a scholar for world about her people and their perspective. She was Native Americans from the 19th century. Many's goal was to connect each nation to the way of life by the federal government, over 200 of them, in order to show the difference in what it meant to be Native American. The photos break the existing barriers of stereotypes that have been created by a lack of education.

- Mindset: Taking on an indigenous identity = fun and interesting, Decolonization= painful and difficult
- in extreme cases: cultural fraud (taking away jobs from real Native Americans)
