Taking my colleague Amber and I will be discussing what we observed from using love as a story device. Review's novel objective is "The Fault in Our Stars" by John Green and my novel selection is "The Gift" by Stephanie Meyer. We will be sharing specific examples and considering what kind of impact this device really has.

When you're looking for a story device, you're looking for a way to connect your characters and their actions. Love is a powerful device because it's a universal emotion that everyone can understand. It's also a complex emotion that can be explored in many different ways. In this case, we're looking at love as a story device in John Green's novel 'The Fault in Our Stars' and Stephanie Meyer's novel 'Twilight'.

MAIN IDEA

Today my colleague Amber and I will be discussing what we observed from using love as a story device. Amber's novel selection is "The Fault in Our Stars" by John Green and my novel selection is "Twilight" By Stephenie Meyer. We will be sharing specific examples and considering what kind of impact this device really has.

Discuss what you learned about the power of love in stories through your protagonist or another character.

Romance can really change the overall tone of a book. Love can add a whole different dimension to a story. In "The Fault in Our Stars" for example, Hazel falls for Gus even though she knows it is not the best idea, since she is going to die.

AMBER: WHAT I LEARNED

But love makes you do crazy things and crazy things is what makes a book interesting. When a book has love in it, it is easier to read and people can relate to it. Therefore I think that a book without love might as well not have any pages
