Setting

The setting of Mrs. Peregrine's home for peculiar children consists of one smaller "side" setting, as well as one main large setting that takes up most of the book.

They include:

- Cairnholm Island ( the one main setting)
- Circle Village (the smaller setting. Circle Village is grandpa Portman's [you'll hear about him later] neighborhood)

Plot/Main Idea

TheCaseSolutions.com

This story's plot follows Jacob Portman, a boy who lives in Florida and leads an ordinary life until one day he finds his grandfather -who he loved and looked up to- dead in the forest. However, in his grandfather's last moments of life, he tells Jacob some supposedly random words that could somehow mean something. He then goes searching for his grandfather's "island" that he spoke of first in his fairytale stories, but then in his last words. But what if his grandfather's stories were true? Throughout the rest of the story Jacob finds the home for peculiars and with those peculiars he goes on adventures that include him finding out about their secret lives and finding out what a peculiar is. (doesn't sound interesting but it's actually quite in depth).

Characters

TheCaseSolutions.com

The characters consist of the following:

- Jacob Portman: the main character, he can see/ sense hollowgast
- Emma Bloom: A peculiar who can conjure fire
- Abraham Portman: (Jacob's Grandfather): He, too could see hollowgast. He is killed in chapter two.
- Bronwyn Bruntley: A girl whose peculiarity makes her unusually strong
- Millard Nullings: A peculiar who is invisible. He is an expert in all things peculiar
- Olive Abroholos Elephanta: A girl who is lighter than air, giving her the ability to float.
- Horace Somnusson: A peculiar who has visions of the future (he also enjoys wearing a top hat, monocle, and suit everywhere).

Characters (cont.)

TheCaseSolutions.com

- Enoch O'Connor: A boy who can reanimate the dead
- Hugh Apiston: A boy who has bees living within him.
- Claire Densmore: A girl with an extra mouth on the back of her head.
- Alma Lefay Peregrine: A ymbryne woman who can manipulate time; she is the headmistress of the home for peculiars (hence the name).
- Franklin Portman: Jacob's bird obsessed father who aspires to be a writer.
- Maryann Portman: Jacob's mother.
- Doctor Golan: A wight posing as Jacob's psychiatrist; he is later killed by Jacob.

Similarities between Call of the Wild (my first book) and Mrs. Peregrine's Home for Peculiar Children

TheCaseSolutions.com

One similarity (and I know this sounds grim) is that throughout the story, (of Mrs. Peregrine's Home for Peculiar Children) sadly, several people die (Grandpa Portman and Doctor Golan to name two). In Call of the Wild many dogs die from fights as well as Buck's (Call of the Wild's main character) master. Another similarity is that in both stories you can really understand what the characters are feeling, whether it's relief or sadness both these books let you know if the characters feel that way (thanks to adjectives. (Call of the Wild had more of this, but the Mrs. Peregrine's home for peculiar children still had quite a few details).

Comparisons

TheCaseSolutions.com

Which book did I like better and why: This is a harder comparison to make since both books are similar, but aren't the same in all aspects. Since I have to choose though, I'd chose "Mrs. Peregrine's Home for Peculiar Children". It was a hard choice since overall "Call of the Wild" was better written, but "Mrs. Peregrine's Home for Peculiar Children" was more entertaining. There was really only one thing that pushed me toward "Mrs. Peregrine's Home for Peculiar Children" and that was the fact that it was my first mystery or horror book (even though it's only slightly that).
