Women have made great gains in the workplace, but the percentage of women in top management positions has not increased proportionally. The "glass ceiling" is still a reality for many women.

Women are often expected to balance their careers with family responsibilities. This can lead to a "mommy track" or a "flexible" schedule, which may not be the best option for everyone.

Research shows that women who have children are less likely to be promoted than men with children. This is often due to the "motherhood penalty."

Women are often expected to be the primary caregivers for their children. This can lead to a "mommy track" or a "flexible" schedule, which may not be the best option for everyone.

People Spending More Time Planning Their Careers

Many people want to have a family without risks and are not ready to take on the responsibility of having a child. Therefore, if they do have a child they are leaving the responsibilities to schools and daycare centres.
