

Working for Count Basie and Artie Shaw (1937-1938)[edit]
 In late 1937, Holiday had a brief stint as a big band vocalist with Count Basie.[27] The traveling conditions of the band were often poor and included one-nighters in clubs, a hand in the arrangements, choosing to portray her then developing persona of a woman unlucky in love. Her tunes included "I Must Have That Man", "Travelin' All in the Opera", "I Can't Get Started", and "Summer Time", a hit for Holiday in 1938, originating Holiday's heavy involvement in the band. He said, "When she rehearsed with the band, it was really just a matter of getting her tunes like she wanted them, because she knew how she wanted to sound and you couldn't tell her what to do." [28] Holiday found herself in direct competition with popular singer Ella Fitzgerald, with whom Holiday would later become friends.[29] Fitzgerald was the vocalist for the Chick Webb Band, who were in competition with Count Basie. On January 16, 1938, concert, the Count Basie and Chick Webb bands had a battle at the Savoy Ballroom. Beat magazine declared Holiday and Basie the winners. A straw poll of the audience saw Fitzgerald win by a three-to-one margin.
 Some of the tunes Holiday performed with Basie were recorded. "I Can't Get Started", "They Can't Take That Away from Me", and "Swing It Brother Swing," are all commercially available [30] Although Holiday was unable to record in the studio with Wilson, By February of that year, Holiday was no longer singing for Basie. The reason given for her firing varies from person to person. Jimmy Rushing, Basie's male vocalist, being "temperamental and unreliable". Holiday complained of low pay and working conditions and may have refused to sing the tunes requested of her or change her style [31].

Performance Enhancing Drugs are being used illegally in professional athletics today and not only should they not be legalized, there should be a uniform testing protocol for all American professional sports.

Combining highly competitive athletes, desperate to succeed, with an obvious easy but dangerous route to success is a terrible plan which would even force those against PEDs to take them to stay competitive.

Performance Enhancing Drugs absolutely should not be legalized in sports!

Currently in the United States, professional sports' drug testing protocols are inadequate and HGH testing hardly exists. As a result of seeing cheaters success, teenage steroid use is on the rise at alarming rates.

American Professional sports must band together under a more stringent drug testing program that is uniform and frequent.

The United States Anti-Doping Agency should be in charge of uniform testing of all professional sports.
