Hero vs Traitor

In every whistleblowing case, there will be a group who praise the whistleblower as a hero, and another group who denounce them as a traitor

The following case studies explore the idea of hero vs traitor

TheCaseSolutions.com

Bradley/Chelsea Manning

- Indiscriminantly disclosed sensitive military secrets to Wikileaks
- Imprisoned for 35 years for violations of the Espionage Act and the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act
- Avoided the death sentence for aiding the enemy

Hero?

- exposed America's war on the Middle East
- exposed America's poor foreign policy

Traitor?

- exposed critical US secrets
- compromised national security

Ethical analysis

- Manning believes he had a duty to society to shed light on American abuse of power
- Nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize in 2013 and won "Person of the Year" in 2012
- Claims he did not initially intend on leaking the backed up data

Consequentialists argue that Manning's actions resulted in damage to national security and risked the lives of informants and government officials.

Do the consequences outweigh the duty? Was Manning misguided?

What would you have done in this situation?
